The Sailaway Family

Owned/operated by a local family, Steve and Katrina Edmondson, who have experience in reef and island cruises since 1985. With origins in East Africa and Australia, they live in Port Douglas and continue to enjoy the environments they love to share: the reef, sailing and snorkelling.

THE GREAT BARRIER REEF

Sailaway

HISTORY, NATURE & ENVIRONMENT

I. LIGHTHOUSE - CIRCA 1900
 II. MCGREGOR FAMILY - CHRISTMAS 1904

The lighthouse was built on Low Island in 1878 and was staffed by lighthouse keepers until it became automated in 1993. Weather data has been collected on the island since 1887 and scientific associations date back to 1928 when it was the base for a year long scientific survey which studied the structure and ecology of the surrounding reef.

This was the first detailed study of a coral reef anywhere in the world and many current theories of coral reef are based on the findings of this expedition. Sailaway is recognised as a 'high standard ECO tourism operator' and contributes to marine research as part of GBRMPA 'Eye on the Reef' programme. Sailaway, first accredited 'Climate Action Leader' by Ecotourism Australia.

ISLAND HERITAGE WALK
 LIGHTHOUSE BUILT IN 1878

REEF, ISLAND HERITAGE & ENVIRONMENTAL INTERPRETATION
 BY MARINE BIOLOGIST & SKIPPER

The reef around Low Isles comprises 150 species of hard corals and is dominated by 15 species of soft corals. Living amongst the corals in the blue lagoon are a large variety of reef fish including angelfish, damsel fish, anemones, giant trevally, sweetlip, fusiliers and many green turtles are sighted daily including 'whale watching' in season.

A number of bird species reside on the island. You may encounter pelicans, honey-eaters, white-breasted wood swallows, mangrove kingfishers, reef egrets with sea eagles and ospreys wheeling overhead.
